

CITY HALL: WANT HOMELESS HOUSING...

Homelessness is a human tragedy that requires urgent action. However, producing low-income housing in Los Angeles costs too much, takes too long, and is maddeningly difficult. City Hall has a chance to do the right things:

- Eliminate all city taxes and fees for non-profit low-income housing.
- DWP should place low-income housing at the top of the list for installations and upgrades.
- Flex building codes for older buildings without sacrificing safety.
- Give genuine concierge service for permits and building inspections.
- Work with the federal government to pre-approve housing vouchers.

In other words, lay out the same red carpet for low-income housing that you do for luxury condos. Put the full power of city government behind bringing new low-income housing units online on an emergency basis because three unhoused people die on LA's streets every day.

...THEN DON'T MAKE IT SO HARD!
